Triune Healing

Integrating Spirit, Science, and Psychology

Warm Greetings,

Every parenting expert advises us all to listen to our child. But what exactly are we listening for?

I remember, almost as if it were yesterday, though in reality it was 28 years ago, when our first daughter was born, I looked at this tiny bundle of life and tried to imagine who is this new little being who has chosen to come into this world through me?

What would she look like when she grew up? What would her voice sound like? Would she be able to sing, or dance or tell a good joke? What would she love to eat? In what area would she shine and what would her challenges be. I looked into my child's eyes many times in those early days and wondered "Who are you?"

I believe that every child is born with a unique role. Every child is born with their own destiny and purpose. I am not saying every child is destined to be a great mathematician or dancer or actress but there is a seed of potential greatness in the blueprint of every one of us.

When I look into the eyes of a new born infant I know there is a purpose and a destiny unique to them. And I believe they are given, in potential, all they need to fulfil it.

Imagine if we, as parents, had some glimpse into this destiny, these potentials, into the timing of experiences that would be in harmony with our children's inner selves, their inner blueprint, their inner clock.

Imagine if we believed that inside our children is all we need to know about how best to raise them, guide them, support them as they develop and mature, as they grow towards their unique purpose and providence.

What would be required of us then?

To listen.

So how do we do that?

We all know that we use our ears to listen. Within each of our children resides a seed of potential that needs regular watering. Listening to a child is so much more than sitting with him after school discussing his day's events, so much more than helping him solve a problem with a friend or a teacher. We need to use more than our ears to communicate with each other.

We need to use our hands to see and our bellies to hear.

Listening to the sacred seed of who our child really is involves using all of our senses. How do they hold their bodies ? What do they draw? How do they interact with friends and siblings? They are asking for support and encouragement as they seek to fulfill their unique destiny and purpose.
